

Vancouver women running for a cure

► City has been hosting cancer fundraiser since 1993 ► CBCF hopes to end breast cancer by 2020

 SARAH N. FITZGERALD
VANCOUVER@METRONEWS.CA

Years after being diagnosed with breast cancer, Signy Wilson and Brandy Worrall are running toward a breast-cancer-free future.

On Sunday, the Vancouver women will join tens of thousands across Canada when they participate in the 19th annual Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation CIBC Run for the Cure.

Worrall, who's been in remission for two years, is running for herself and her two children.

"I really don't want my children to go through it, but I'm realistic," she said.

Details

Vancouver's run starts at 9:30 a.m. at Concord Pacific Place, 1095 Pender St.

- Fee The $40 participation fee is waived for participants who raise $150 or more in donations
- Online For more information, visit cbcf.org

"It's something they're going to have to go through if medical research doesn't accelerate."

The Run is Canada's largest single-day, volunteer-led event.

"It's just such an important cause because it's raising money," added Wilson.

► Signy Wilson says she'll wear her pink bra at this Sunday's CIBC Run for the Cure.

SARAH N. FITZGERALD/FOR METRO VANCOUVER